MEA

already have plotted out their academic calendars for the next two to three years, are sticking to the two-day break.

Kirk Schneidawind, executive director of the Minnesota School Boards Association, said he's seen some interest from school districts in changing the four-day weekend tradition, but not much action to make it happen. School officials, he said, are in a bit of a bind, torn between trying to find more academic days on the calendar early in the school year, respecting some families' longstanding traditions of vacationing during the long break, and deciding if it makes sense to cancel one day of school and bring students back just before the weekend.

"I think the Thursday-only schedule makes it even a little more challenging for districts to turn around and say: 'Well, we'll (close) on Thursday and then we're going to have classes on Friday,'" he said.

Most of the state's largest districts, including Anoka-Hennepin, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Osseo, committed to a two-day MEA break this and next year. So have others around the state, from Duluth to Mankato. But the Rosemount-Apple Valley-Eagan district, the state's fourth-largest, has opted to change plans next year. The calendar approved for the 2020-21 school year includes regular school days on both the planned MEA conference date and the Friday that follows it.

District spokesman Tony Taschner said the district's calendar committee recommended the shift because of "uncertainty" about the future of the teachers conference – and because it allowed the district to add a day to the holiday break and cut a day off the end of the school year.

He said the decision, which could be revisited before the next school year, was made by a committee that includes representatives from the teachers union.

"The rationale is that two days of school in October are more valuable days for student learning than the day before winter break (Dec. 23) and a day at the end of the school year," he said.

Minneapolis Public Schools spokesman Dirk Tedmon said officials "remain open to consideration for change," but have already scheduled three years' worth of calendars that include the longer break.

District students get three days off in a row, with Wednesday set aside for parent-teacher conferences, as has been done in the past.

"(District leaders) chose to leave it for a couple of reasons – the largest being they felt it would be highly unproductive to have students come back on a Friday for classes after having been off on Thursday," he said.

Bernie Burnham, Education Minnesota's vice president, said the conference remains a critical time for teachers around the state to connect with each other, share their experiences and get additional training – and for teachers, students and families to get a break from the usual weekly grind. She said moving the conference to a different day or changing the schedule has "not been the conversation" among the union's leaders.

Union leaders expect about 2,000 of their members to attend this year's conference, which will be held Thursday at downtown St. Paul's RiverCentre.

That's about the same attendance as last year, but down from about 3,000 participants in 2017, when the conference was still spread over two days.

This year's event will feature sessions on topics ranging from science instruction to working with students with autism to retirement planning.

The keynote speaker is Eddie Moore Jr., a national speaker and trainer who focuses on issues of diversity, racial justice and privilege.

Haus got off the school bus with his siblings, according to the sheriff's office, and went to play with the family dog. He wasn't seen again until the early hours of Wednesday.

More than 600 volunteers were out in the night to help.

"There was no stopping our local community," said Sherburne County Sheriff Joel Brott in an interview Wednesday morning. "They had seen the post and we were happy to have them."

According to Brott, law enforcement set up reporting locations at Palmer Park and Palmer Township Hall after the number of volunteers expanded rapidly to more than 600.

Law enforcement determined which areas to search and selected volunteers, who were bused over to help with the search.

When Fines arrived after around 9 p.m., he said hundreds of cars were parked on the sides of the roads.

"You could see lines of people with flashlights off in the darkness, moving through fields," he said.

Fines asked around and found his way to the command center, introduced himself and waited for law enforcement to tell him if there was a grid he could search.

"In these types of cases, a missing child, and not knowing specifically why he is missing, time is our enemy," Brott said.

With dropping temperatures, officials were conducting a search and rescue while also trying to find out whether there were other reasons for him to be missing.

"Every minute counts," Brott said.

All area agencies were involved in the search, according to Brott, including mounted patrol, police dogs, a Minnesota State Patrol helicopter and volunteers.

The search was systematic, beginning where the boy was last seen and pushing out.

Law enforcement had targeted a large corn field, Brott said, and officers were walking shoulder to shoulder in their search.

Brott was not there when the boy was found, but he said he spoke with the family and boy inside an ambulance. The boy was in "good spirits" and doing well, according to Brott.

Haus and the dog were found around 1:50 a.m. a little more than a mile from his home. Haus was cold but in good health.

Police and fire departments from Becker, Big Lake and Elk River, the Clear Lake Fire Department, St. Cloud Police Department, Minnesota State Patrol, FBI, Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension, Stearns County Sheriff's Office, Gold Cross Ambulance, Red Cross and Clear Lake Lions assisted.

"I'm very proud of the community," Brott said.

Zahradka has "been to hell and back," herself, she said. She endured sexual harassment at work followed by a related legal fight.

"I spent 2017 and 2018 battling for justice in our legal system, and ultimately was denied that justice," she writes on her campaign website. "I lost everything I had spent over 20 years building and it was truly a devastating experience."

Zahradka was born in Grand Forks, North Dakota, traveled around because her father served in the Air Force, and she returned to Grand Forks for college. After being crowned Mrs. Minnesota America, she created the television show "The Minnesota Experience" and owned a production company.

In addition to women, Zahradka hopes to appeal to young people in the district who are concerned about climate change.

That's one of Todd's top three issues: climate change, getting money out of politics and Medicare for all. He's been demonstrating with unions in Central Minnesota and at the jail in Elk River, and he wants to stop family separation at the border, he said. Zahradka agrees with Todd on his issues and the two have met. She said she gave him a hug.

The two have slightly different takes on the House impeachment inquiry of President Donald Trump. Emmer has supported the president since the inquiry began.

"I'm glad that we're doing these investigations," Todd said. "I do hope that we decide to impeach."

Zahradka supports the process, so people can see the truth and not just hear about a "witch hunt," she said.

She sees her inexperience as a boon in the election.

"My campaign is uncorrupted," Zahradka said. "I hate the politicians who shake your hand and smile and shake your hand and say, 'Yes, yes, yes,' then go back to Washington and do exactly what they were going to do anyway."

She plans to be in St. Cloud for an event this weekend.

Todd lives in Sauk Rapids. Emmer's home base is Delano.

Emmer won 61% of the vote against Todd in the 2018 general election. He handily won a Republican primary that year as well. He served in the Legislature before the Congress and is a former conservative radio host.

Emmer is also chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee, which works to elect more Republicans to the House.

His campaign did not provide an interview or statement by St. Cloud Times' Wednesday deadline.

As of Sept. 30 filings, Emmer had $731,000 in his reelection fund. Todd had nearly $7,000, and Zahradka hadn't yet filed anything to the Federal Election Commission.

The primary election will be Aug. 11, 2020. The general election will be Nov. 3, 2020.
